Reviews

This book is definitely not straightforward to get started on studying but extremely exciting to read. It is really simplistic but shocks in the 50 percent of the ebook. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.

Not illustrated. 1898 Excerpt: .in the following statement: It seems, therefore, that the data go far to prove that evaporation is effected principally by temperature, and to an entirely subordinate extent by the character of the vegetation or the topography of the water shed. The force of this is apparent when we bear in mind that rainfall, less evaporation, as we have considered it, gives the amount of water which will flow off in the streams. Mr. George S. Rafter, C. E., in a valuable article on stream flow in relation to forests takes exception to the theory advanced by Mr. Vermeule, on the ground that the New Jersey data, on which he chiefly bases his statement, are too restricted in their scope to give any conclusion on the point in question, and also calls attention to some errors in refutation of Mr. Vermeule's theory by instancing the run-off of the Upper Hudson river, stating that In 1892 the total rainfall was 53.87, the run-off 33.08, and the evaporation 20.79 inches. A comparison of the two years, 1891-92, as regards the evaporation, is exceedingly interesting. The rainfall in 1892 was 10.91 inches more while the evaporation was only 0.39 greater than in 1891. As illustrating this position further, we may take the year 1893, when the total rainfall dropped to 42.18 inches, or within 0.78 inches of what it was in 1891, whereupon the evaporation showed 20.27 inches, or practically the same figure as in 1891. In 1894, however,...
